“ The Anthropology/Sociology major offers dual perspectives in the realm of social science. Our department specializes in trying to understand what makes us human while encouraging students to become advocates for social change. It is easy to get to know the faculty and other students in the department because of the small class sizes. You will spend your days reading about structured inequalities, cultural traditions, and/or ancient remains. SOAN coaches you in developing your own research project through Research Design courses. It teaches you about all of the difficulties of research and allows you to explore your interests with help from the faculty. ”
